

DEATH WAS NATURAL

So Said the Jury in the Inquest
Over the Exhumed Body of Margaret Devlin.

CUT MADE IN EMBALMING

The Evidence Only Brought Forth the Fact That Because the Neighbors
Were Not Told All the Particulars
They Became Suspicious.

The coroner's inquest over the exhumed body of Margaret Devlin, of Stony Hill, near Yardley, was held at that place this morning, and resulted in a verdict of "death from natural causes."

It appears from the evidence of the several witnesses sworn this morning that Margaret Devlin led a very exclusive life, and the people with whom she lived had not informed any of their neighbors as to Mrs. Devlin's illness or death.

As soon as Mrs. Devlin died her son, who was superintending the building of a trolley line near Williamsport, was telegraphed for, and he came at once. Mr. Devlin came to Trenton immediately after he reached Stony Hill and secured Mr. James Murphy to take charge of the funeral. Mr. Murphy sent his embalmers to Stony Hill and had the body properly taken care of, and the gash on Margaret Devlin's breast is the one made by the embalmer in the course of his work. At the inquest held this morning by Coroner Kunsman, nothing at all sensational was developed.

The jury empanelled by Coroner Kunsman, of Morrisville, consisted of Edward Wright, foreman, of Morrisville; John B. Stockton, Joseph D. E. M. Lloyd, Henry Stackhouse and S. B. Willard.
